Taylor's First Job —U. S. Berlin Policy

(See Story on Page 17)
Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor today prepared for his first assignment as President Kennedy's new adviser on intelligence and military affairs — what to do in Berlin.

Mr. Kennedy told the scholarly former paratroop commander yesterday to begin work Saturday. His first assignment is to review United States planning in the Berlin crisis.

In announcing Gen. Taylor's appointment, the White House said he would be a presidential watchdog in the intelligence field, and would not be interposed between Mr. Kennedy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, National Security Council or the Central Intelligence Agency.

Gen. Taylor will have no command authority, press secretary Pierre Salinger said.
